PELLICER'S CONFESSION IN FULL

VISIT TO GONZALES.

The Funeral of Otero and the Inquest to Take Place To-day. &c.

The little station house on the hill above Fort Greene where Captain Waddy's headquarters are located, presents quite a different appearance from what it did a week Instead of the dreary loneliness and unvarying of eager visitors tax the good-humored Captain's patience to the utmost, making him repeat for the hundredth time the story of the chase and capture of the alleged mur derer Gonzales. Roundsman Smith is also besieged and pewildered with questions as to his reason in the first piace for suspecting Pellicer, the exact manner in which soized him and how he placed the steel bracelets on his hands. The dagger, with its jagged and curied point and rust of blood; the razor with which the victim made in ineffectival struggle for his life, and the clothes of zales, with the tell-tale blood stains, are again and egain produced and examined. Inquisitive eyes and each point of the weapons fresh evidences of guilt to add to the already overwhelming weight of testimony that the desperadoes. On the pantaloons of Gonzales there are numerous blood stains. Inside the waistband is the track of his thumb, and the right pocket, into which he thrust his hand, is stiffened with blood. GONZALES FACE TO FACE WITH THE MURDERED

MAN.
Yesterday morning Gonzales was taken to the dead ouse where the lifeless body of Otero was lying. He was ot told the purpose of the visit, and was brought into the bom by Captain Waddy, unconscious of the presence of the dead. When he stood beside the shrouded corpse the overing was removed, and his dark, ovil eye fell on the insity face of the murdered man. Instantly a tremor hot through his frame, a gurgling sound issued from his hroat, his face grew absolutely livid, his lips parted and cheking sensation came over him. With an indescrib-ble expression of horror and fright be turned his face aduced to look on it again.

THE PHOTOGRAPH OF GONZALES. Captain Waddy next took him down to a photographer's Fulton street, and had his photograph taken. The on Fulion street, and had his photograph taken. The Captain dressed himself in the same costume which he wore at the capture of Gonzales, and a picture was taken sof both men in the position in which they were at that time. The Captain is standing with his right hand grasping Gonzales' collar, and his loft hand, with the club, holding his wrist. Gonzales' head is thrown back, and he is in the same attitude as he was on the sidewalk outside the Centre street boarding house. The Captain and his charge then returned to the station house.

scharge then returned to the station house.

As some of the points in Pellicer's confession on Satury were omitted in many of the reports published in coher morning papers, we republish it in full, that ey may have a chance of copying it from the Herald decreeding the many erroneous statements they have ade regarding the murder. At the time the confession is made there were in Captain Waddy's office the Spantonson to Consul, Mr. Cuyas, proprietor of the Barcelona Hotel; Tolosa, Captain Waddy and three of his officers.

When Pellicer was brought into the room and saw Mr. yas he hung down his head as if in shame. On being Cayas he houg down his head as if in shaine. On being contered to take a chair he sat down opposite the Consul. The irons were then removed from his wrists, and the following conversation took place between him and Mesars. Cayas, Tolosa and the Spanish Consul:

Mr. Tolosa:—Are you a Spaniard?

Prisoner—Ver.

following conversation took place between him and Messrs. Cuyas, Tolosa and the Spanish Consul:—

Mr. Tolosa—Are you a Spaniard?

Prisoner—I did not murder him; I know nothing about him. On the night of the murder I was walking an Broadway with my friend Vile. The next morning I went to the house of Acencio & Co., Broadway, and borrowed fifteen dollars from Mr. Mora, one of the firm, for which I gave him a receipt.

Mr. Guyas—It is useless for you to deny what you know about this horrible murder. It only makes mathers worse for you, as when you are brought to trial the judge will see at once that there was a plot to murder Mr. Otero and that you had some accomplice; so I advise you to confess the truth, and it will be better for you. You are here in solitary confinement, charged with being the murderer. If you tell who was your accomplice you shall have a lawyer to defend you, and shall have a far trial; but, if you persist in denying your manifest guilt it shad go harder with you than you think. I did not on the confinement of the you defend you to confess the reare many proofs against you, some of which I don't know myself; but the gloves and the cuts on your hands are sufficient to condemn you.

The prisoner here became very much agitated and moved uneasily in his chair.

Mr. Guyas—Recollect you are the only one now in the hands of justice, and those who induced you to join them in this wicked crime are at liberty. You will then be the only one to suffer for their guilt. It was to make your poor lather and mother in Span, what their feelings will be when they hear of their son being brought to a disgraceful end.

Here the prisoner burst into tears.

Mr. Cuyas—You must have courage and tell the truth, You will, of course, have to suffer some punishment for your share in the murder, but you will come out best in the end of your coniess.

Prisoner (cobbing violently)—I promise to tell the murder, but you will one out best in the end of your coniess.

Prisoner (sobbing violently)—I promise to tell the whole truth.

The Spanish Consul—Will you swear by the religion in which you were brought up to tell nothing but the devite. The Spanish Consul—Will you swear by the religion for which you were brought up to tell nothing but the feath?

Prisoner (in a low tone)—I swear. On the morning set the day on which the murder was committed two persons came to my room in the Hotel de Cuba and arsked me if thought they could get a room for themselves there. They said they didn't care how dark or small it was, so long as it was cheap, as they wanted only we sleep there. I told them it would be better for them to go down sairs and speak to the landlady. They both went down, and I did not see them again until that evening. About seven o'clock in the evening I was gussing up Bleecker street, towards Broadway, when I had not seen before. The man who called to my room in the morning asked me if I would go to Brooklyn with them. I consented, and we took the Bleecker street cars to Pulton ferry. We then crossed the ferry, and on the Brooklyn aide we met another person to whom the man whom I met at the Hotel de Cuba and who, I understand is called Gonzales, introduced us. He was a tail, stout man, with a long, back beard and large overcoar, and, by his broken pronunc aiton of Spanish, I think he was either a German or a Frenchman. We cheen took the cars at the ferry, and I asked Gonzales where we were going. He answered that this French. I man was a wine merchant, who had promised him a sustantion, and that they were going to his house. After we went some distance in the car, we got off together, and went into a liquor store. The Frenchman left us at the door, and we three went it. When I came out I felt considerable intoxicated, as I was not used to drinking liquor. We went down towards the park, after leaving the saloon. It was raining a little at the time. The park was very dark, and at the entrance I stopped behind Gonzales and the other for a few moments. I was about following them, when I heard the voice of a man crying out and running on the path. I ran towards the place whence the noise proceeded, and I saw two men with razors or dangers raised o them threatened if I did not swear that I would keep silent about what had taken place they would kill me I was obliged to swear in order to save my life. They ordered me to so with them, and at the park gate the Frenchman went off in one direction while Gonzales and I went towards the ferry. My companion, when we crossed over to New York, said that he didn't want to go to the Hotel de Cuba. I told him that there was a boarding house at No. 217 Centre street, where I had stopped for some time before. We went there and stopped all night. The next morning we arose very early and went out. We visited a clothing store and my companion bought for himself a new suit, a pair of shoes and a cap, and for me a shirt and a pair of gloves. We went back to the Centre street boarding house and my companion paid one week's board in advance for himself. While in this house he took out of his pocket a lot of papers, on some of which I saw the name, Jose Garcia, with another name which I think was oftero. I left him there and went to the Hotel de Cuba. There I was told that there was a friend of mine going away that day by the steamer for Havana. There was a poleceman in the botel and I left for the steamer immediately. On the pier I was arcested and brought to this station house.

The Spanish Consul them examined him, as has been

Mr. Cuyas also spoke to Gonzales, who recognized him at once. Mr Cuyas told him that he came to ascertain what part he had in the murder, in order that he might try and be of some service to him. The assassin answered that he appreciated the kindness that prempted the visit, but that he didn't know what he was talking about. Mr. Cuyas told him that he had better follow the example of Pellicer and tell the truth. Gonzales replied that he had nothing to confess, and that he couldn't see how the court could affect him, as there were no proofs against him. Mr. Cuyas then told him that if he was not willing to confess the truth and thereby have some claims to mercy, he would leave him and never see him again. Gonzales persisted still in his professions of innocence, and said he didn't care what they would do with him.

During the interview Gonzales appeared very uneasy, and repeatedly glanced behind him with a frightened air. He always paused for some moments and reflected before he made a reply; and when Mr. Cuyas was going away he asked him how long they intended to keep him in that narrow little cell, where he was shut up in darkness and had no room to move about.

CAPTAIN PETERSON'S VISIT TO THE PRISONER.
Yesterday afternoon Captain J. Peterson, of the bark Thomas, lying at pier No. 27 East river, in company with Messra. Fabri and Moyer, merchants, of this city, also the steward of the yessel, by request of the police authorities, proceeded from New York to Brooklyn on a visit to the prisoner Gouzales, with a view to his identification. Captain Waddy conducted the examination.
On Captain Peterson entering the prisoner's cell the prisoner founzales exclaimed. "Oh, my God." and appeared much surprised. Captain Peterson recognized Gonzales without any difficulty, although when he was on board the bark Thomas the day before the murder he had a full beard and mustache. The steward also identified the prisoner. The prisoner said he recognized the captain, but not the steward. The interview was short, as it was merely for the purpose of identifying the captain, but not the steward. The interview was short, as it was merely for the purpose of identifying the prisoner.

Captain Peterson states that he had been acquainted with Senor Otero for the past eight years, having made his acquaintance in Cardenas, Cube, to which place he has been trading during that period. Otero was the proprietor of a restaurant, bill and saloon and livery stable, and interly purchased a theatre, now in course of completion. His visit to this country was for the purpose of purchasing faxtures for that institution. Senor Otero was always reputed to be carrying on a profitable business and possessed of some wealth, and latterly secured a prize of $25,000 in the Royal Havana lottery. Otero was a single man; he was known by nearly every American sea captain trading to Cardenas, who always considered him the best friend Americans had at that place. He was a man of great liberality, of a charitable and kind disposition; indeed it is said that his loss will be deeply felt by American traders at Cardenas.

Captain Peterson says that after Senor Otero visited this country he accompanied him to Philadelphia, where he remained three days. During that time they visited business houses, inquiring the prices of goods, but that Otero purchased othing but a sewing machine. The day before the murder Captain Peterson and Senor Otero, accompanied by Gonzales, went on a business tour through the city. In the course of the trip they visited the store of Arthur & Pancoast, in Mercer street, where Senor Otero purchased chandellers for his theatre. From there they went to the store of Chester & Partridge, dealers in furniture, in New Bowery, where a purchase of chairs was made, and from thence proceeded to the store of Mr. Crait, importer of paper hangings, in Maiden lane, where some purchases were made. Captain Peterson parted company with Senor Otero on the corner of Maiden lane, and never again saw thim alive.

After the recognition of Gonzales by Captain Peterson he latter was shown the pethper-and-salt c

THE PRISONERS.

The prisoners Pellicer and Gonzales are kept in separate cells and have no means of communicating with each other. Pell'cer evinces a more hopeful disposition since he disclosed the whereabouts and caused the arrest of Gonzales. The latter retains a deged, sullen expression of countenance, and no doubt feels the remorse consequent upon the high crime with which he is charged. The evidence against him is said to be most conclusive.

Mutiny on the English Bark Copsie-The Vessel and Crew in Custody of the United States Revenue Cutter Kankakee, &c.
OUR PORTRESS MONROE CORRESPONDENCE.

Formers Monroe, Nov. 26, 1866.

The United States revenue cutter Kankakee, Captain Slicer, brought in tow to-day the English bark Copeie, the second mate and crew of which had mutinied. The Copsie was on her way to Liverpool from Baltimore. Between Wolftrap and the Capes the mutiny first developed self, and it is not unlikely that a fearful and bi tragedy would have been enacted had not the Kankakee, while on a cruising tour, happened in the vicinity. The while on a cruising tour, happened in the vicinity. The captain and his first mate were the only ones to oppose the mutineers. Seeing a signal of distress the Kankakee went to the aid of the bark, and on learning the state of facts at once placed Lieutenant Smith and fourteen men in charge of the mutineers, all of whom were promptly broned. The Kankakee accompanied the bark to the Capes, to let her proceed to sea, as was hoped, without further trouble, and was about to part company with her when the mutineers broke their irons, threatened anew the life of the captain, and declared they would not go to sea by compulsion or otherwise. Seeing this spirit of determined mutiny on the part of the crew, at the request of the captain of the bark the Kankakee took the latter in tow and brought her into Hampton Roads, as stated, where she now lies andobred, under custody of the Kankakee. The crew was shipped in Baltimore, and are altogother a desperate and dangerous set of men. There was no legitimate cause for the revolt, as the bark is stanch and seaworthy, and the men had received the usual advance, and had no reason to complain of the treatment of the captain. The Copsie is loaded with corn.

THE PIRATE CHICKAMAUGA.

The Rebel Pirate Steamer Raised and

A despatch from Wilmington announces that the privateer steamer Chickamauga, sunk in the Cape Fear river, has been raised and towed to that city. This is the famous but short-lived pirate which made such a successful raid on the North Atlantic coast in October and November one year ago. She left Wilmington, running the blockade, October 24, 1864, and immediately steamed northward. She fell in with her first victims on October 30, destroying on that day the bark M. I.. Potter and schooner Goodspeed; on the next day the bark Emma I. Hall and ship Shooting Star. On November I she scuttled the schooner Otter, and the day following bonded the bark Speedwell for eighteen thousand lollers in gold. On November 16 she appeared at Hallfax, where she reported having destroyed a bark and two scheoners. From Halifax she sailed for Bermuda, where she lay for some time, and then ran the blockade where she lay for some time, and then ran the blockade into Wilmington a few days before the capture of Fort Fisher. Her companion in depredation, the Tallahassee, endeavored to do the same thing a few days afterwards, but found herself on getting into port in the hands of Admiral Porter. On the capture of Fort Fisher and destruction of Caswell the rebels scuttled the Chickamangs, she has been lying quietly in the Cape Fear river until the present time, when raised and appropriated to Yankee uses. She is a screw steamer, fore and aft schooner rigged, with two smoke stacks. She carried as armament one thirty-two pounder and two twenty-four pounder gaus. Her machinery is nearly perfect, owing to its having been heavily greased before she was sunk. The same parties who raised the Chickamanga are now engaged on the North Heath, some seven miles from Wilmington.

Mr. Colfax, on being introduced, was very entire tically greeted, the ladies, of whom there were a large number present, heartily joining in the demonstration. After bowing his acknowledgments the speaker at once entered upon his theme. He regretted much that a mistake in a telegraphic despatch alluding to this lecture had misled many to suppose that he was going to speak this evening on the duties of the coming Congress. He had spoken at the capital a few nights since briefly, but Cankly, but trankly he treated frankly, he trusted, in regard to what he thought of the duties of the American people in this the most important Congress that ever assembled at Washington. He had nothing to take back from what he then said—(apthere is but one pathway on which every patriot at this hour should walk. That is the path of duity to our beloved but imperilled country. He had also noticed with regret that the papers had announced that he was to deliver a great lecture to spirit. The letture he would deliver a great lecture to spirit. The letture he would deliver a great lecture by the part in the particular some of the scenes and incidents he had witnessed and encountered in his late journey which consumed some four or five months. It was the most delightful and insignating the particulars of it they would find it a simple narrative, unadorned with gems of poetry or flowers of relective. The lecturer told him, in reply, that the reign of civilization was against such a hidrous doctrine; that it placed them in antagonism to the law of the land, and that it was full time to have another revelation as soon as possible prohibiting it hereafter. (Applause.) He (Brigham) replied that he would be glad to have such a revelation. (Laughter.) But he thought that if he rave up plurality, as they call polygamy, he would be next called upon to give up his Bible. To this Mr. Coltax said no; that the government recognized and permitted universal liberty of conscience, and in all things apportanting to civil and religious liberty; that he could have his church and his aposites and bishops and elders; but that the United States must be a homogeneous people, and that no organization could exist so condemned by the civilized world on the plea that it was a religion based on reveiation. The lecturer said from this conversation he was convinced that Brigham Young felt the time was fast approaching when he must either give up polygamy or array himself in hostility to the government. He (Mr. Colfax) in conclusion told Brigham that the nation had a right to demand obedience to its laws, and to insist upon the abolition of a custom so repagnant to the law of the land and of the civilized world. The lecturer having concluded his narrative of his mierview with Brigham, said:—It is the plain and palpable daity we owe to ourselves, to the nation and to the civilized world, either at once to repeal the Antipolisamy law or else demand obedience to the law as it is. (Applause.) It would not do for the government to set at nought the law of the land and permit them to set at nought the law of the land permit them to set at nought the law of the land by keeping a plurality of wives while they are paid for enforcing the law. The one great desideratum, the lecturer and energy to that great work. The lecturer on concluding, was again enthusiastically applauded.

CHICAGO, Nov. 27, 1885.
The largest, most fashionable and enthusiastic audience of the season assembled to-night to hear Mme. Gazzaniga in her great and unrivalled rôle of Saffo, which was ritten by Pacini some twenty-five years ago, at Naples, mense sensation that the whole populace rushed en masse to hear it. One seeing to night Crosby's Opera House crowded with the thousands of eager listeners would suppose that the Naples sensation is to have its repetition in the Queen City of the West. This opera was given some years ago in New York and Philadelphia with the greatest success. To-night's cast was a strong one, and formed a galaxy of stars unsurpassed for the requirements of their respective parts. It was as follows:—Mme. Gazzaniga as Saffo, Signora Cash Pollini as Clomene, Signor Musiani as Phoan, Signor Brandini as Alcandro, Mile. Manfred as and dramatically, that words completely fail us with which to express the furor she created by her rendition of Saffo. She was, indeed, the living representative of the Divine Pearless herself. In the first act, when she meets her faithless Phoan, her first aria, Il Varna al Ciel, is sung the spirit of genius flashes across her mind, and the divine goddess of poetry herself seems to take possession of the great actress and singer; but she at once relapses again into the supplicating and most effective pieces of vocal execution we ever listened to. While the orchestra ceases entirely the finale of the Di quai Loave lasgrime is carried on between Saffo and Clomene, forming a most beautiful blending of two voices. It was rapturously applauded and had to be repeated. But Gazzaniga showed her excellence not only in the dramatic conception of Saffo, but also her voice seemed to partake of the inspiration which pervaded her during the whole of the play. Her recitations, especially the one before the quartet De altra denna, was something one can hear but seldom in one's Gazzaniga, and had to be repeated; but Mme, Gazzaniga's genius shone out most resplendently in the aria with lyre accompaniment just previous to her ascending the fatal rock. In this aria she concentrated all her great now is as Saffo-namely, without a rival.

Signora Cash Pollini was in splendid voice, and acted Clomene to perfection. Her Ah, cm lui mi fu Ropela, Musiani's high notes came out clearer than ever, and his role was sung and acted with the fire with which this fine artist is wont to render his parts. One of the most difficult tenor songs is "Mai pui mai pui divisi;" but Musiani mastered it most successfully, and won fresh laurels. Brandini, as Alcandro, acquitted himself most admi-rably.
